BELOW: With space at a premium in cities, allotments allow residents the chance to enjoy growing vegetables, fruit, and flowers. Marigolds act as a natural insect repellent. Kew Allotments, Surrey, England
